Genealogy

This activity will help you use the Internet to trace your family history.

What will I learn?

- Where you can research your family history
- Which free sites can give you information
- How you can use paid-for sites in your search

How do I do it?

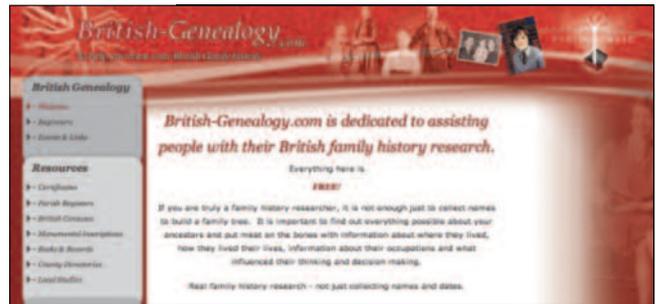

Be safe! If you're using this hand-out on a shared or public computer, remember to:

- Log on using a 'strong password': one that includes upper and lower case letters, numbers, and isn't something that someone else could guess.
- Never share or write down your password.
- Log out when you're finished.

The web links referred to throughout this document can be found in the Useful Links section at the end.

Where can I find out how to research my family history?

1. Researching your family's past can be fun and rewarding. You can trace your ancestors and discover things you never knew.
2. Start by writing down what you know, and ask your family what they know. The Internet can provide vital help: lots of sites, both free and paid-for, can help you fill in the gaps and reach back into the past.

3. To learn about the basics, go to the British Genealogy web link and click on 'Beginners':

- Read this quick guide to getting started.

4. For a more detailed introduction, go to the BBC family history web link and click on 'The Basics':

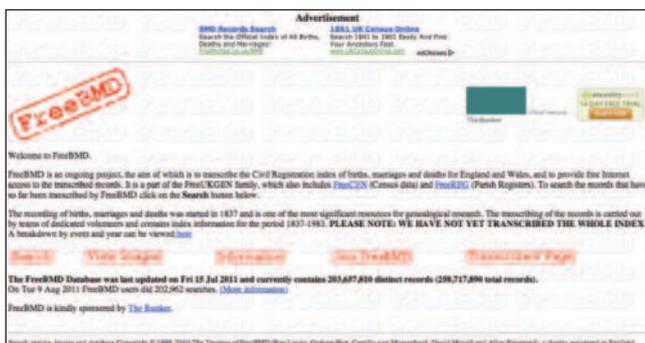

- Explore the overview and basic guide web links.
- Make sure you look at the page on 'To Pay or Not To Pay?' This is quite a long web page, so you can come back to it again in your own time. It will help you make the right choice if you decide to use paid-for sites in your search – see below.

What free sites can give me information?

5. There are lots of free sites that can help you get started. These usually don't hold as much information as paid-for sites, but they are a good place to get started. Use these free sources of information first, before you think about paying.
6. Go to the FreeBMD (Births, Marriages and Deaths) web link. This is a free database of birth, death and marriage records in England and Wales (there are also links for ScotlandsPeople and Northern Ireland Genealogy. The instructions below won't apply, but you can find similar information):
 - Click on 'Search' and look at the different fields that you can fill in. This can be as simple as a surname, or it can be a combination of as many search fields as you want, like a date range, district or county.
 - The BBC family history web link has a list of other free sites for you to use, or you can find more using a search engine.

7. There are also online forums for people tracing their family tree:
 - Go back to the British Genealogy web link and click on the 'Forum' link to explore one.
 - There are other forums you can use. Search for 'genealogy forum', 'family history forum' and see what your search engine can find.

8. Search engines can help you find out more about each person's background, location and life, bringing your family history to life:
 - See if you can find historic photos of where they lived and worked.
 - Find out more about events that shaped their lives.
 - Organise what you find using bookmarks, folders and documents on your computer.

How can I use paid-for sites in my search?

9. Paid-for sites can often provide much more information. They can also offer other services, such as letting you build and share your family tree online.
10. Go to the Genes Reunited web link. You can get started for free but for more options, you need to pay:
 - Find out what the different subscription rates are. You can also buy credits and 'pay per view' but this doesn't give you access to the other site services.
 - Find the 'See our guide to records' link and use this to explore what the site can offer. Again it's a long page so just read the introduction if you want.
 - Find the 'Terms and conditions' link at the very bottom of the web page and scroll down to read the guide to your cancellation rights.
